

Born and raised on a small farm in Green County, Mitchell's 4-H projects include animal science and animal production. He has won awards and sold some good animals, with the money from used to grow his herd and to fund his college education.

Early in 2018 Mitchell noticed that not every student was able to participate in activities that came with a price tag. And, even more troubling, he noticed that some of his classmates were hungry.

That's when Mitchell took action. Through his 4-H club and FFA chapter, he started learning more about food insecurity, poverty and homelessness. Fast forward a few months to a steamy day in July 2018 when Mitchell made a personal sacrifice to help others, donating one of his pigs to the local food bank and convincing the local butcher to donate the meat processing. Mitchell set up a chain of events that led to more than 500 servings of meat going to people in need.

Thank you, Mitchell, for Living the Pledge and Making a Difference!
